MARIE WALCAMP, THE MOVIE DAREDEVIL

The Adventures of a Star Who Has Been Called "the Bravest Girl in Filmdom"—Has Had Many Narrow Escapes.

(Editor's Note.—This is the first of a series of thrilling adventures in which Marie Walcamp, the daredevil girl of the movies, has flirted with death as part of her daily work. She was selected to play her nerve-searching roles because after extensive tests she demonstrated that no hazard could outface her. These stories, never before told by Miss Walcamp, are unique in the chronicles of perilous undertakings.)

Miss Marie Walcamp, noted beauty and the "daredevil girl of the movies," has clinched her title as the bravest woman in the film world.

The crowning test of her nerve came recently when during a scene staged by the 101 Bison company, at

Hollywood, Cal., of which she is a leading member, she was attacked and severely wounded by a rebellious African lion and a leopard in quick succession.

The jungle creatures were restless in their pens. In the wilderness it was roving time. Wild geese were winging south. The beasts used for motion picture scenes of wild life felt the mystic stir of the season. They stretched and whined and snapped their tails ceaselessly.

Miss Walcamp studied them closely, with that sixth sense she has developed to register animal moods. What she saw alarmed her but did not deter her from going ahead with the production.

This morning, however, it was dif-
